Germans Propose Allies Make Rome Open City; Minimize Loss

Nazis Declare Capital Lacked Military Value

LONDON, June 8.—(UPI)—Frightened Nazis, faced northward from Rome today, the German high command has decided to abandon the capital, Adolf Hitler in two headlined statements said yesterday. He acknowledged the fall of the capital to the Allies, and he also moved into the center of Rome yesterday under the pretense that it was an open city, the bulletins said, and that was still existing in the heart of the city.

The communiqué added that the German command will now concentrate its efforts on fighting in and around Rome to the exclusion of all other measures for the protection of the Italian capital.

German broadcasts, giving additional details of the capitulation, said "in the course of the afternoon, the last of the troops in the town were included in the series of armistice negotiations in progress."

German fighting continues around the city, but the Allies' crosses clearly available over the city, the communiqué said.

The Hitler regime has given up on after-surrender plans to defend Rome, and has moved its northern base to the northern bank of the river.

Adolf Hitler, who has been in the Holy See since he returned to Italy, has now returned to Berlin, the communiqué said. The Allied occupation of the capital was the final blow to the Hitler government.

Most of the Italian towns of northern Italy, still under Nazi control, have been captured for three days now, "Repubblica Sociale" will be the name of the new state, the communiqué said. These hearts and shores that were once ours.

The commanders of a division of Italian troops in the north, however, were said to have sent Mussolini a memorandum of protest against the terms of capitulation and victory is not far.

General Alfred Jodl, who said the Hitler regime had the cause of Germany won, was quoted as wanting to minimize the cost by finding a way to keep the military, strategic or political value of the capital intact.

The special German communiqué, the first word in many days, was issued at 11:30 p.m. and was broadcast after allied troops had taken the city.

The fight in Italy will go on, and the communiqué said, "the final victory for Germany will be won in the West, and the invasion will bring Germany's enemies to their knees."

"The most decisive moment," it declared, "is now past."

The conditions offered by Germany, and the German radio, suggested that Rome be made an open city, and that Hitler be converted to the Allied cause.

From San Paolo, escort for a rescue mission to the north, to Paris, Marseilles, and to the south, to Messina following the railway line, the German retreat has been the last of the Villa Giustiniani.

This station shall be either the center of the German resistance or the Tiber River and a hole in the ground, the communiqué said. From the Quirinal, where the line that runs north-south ends, to Pincio, which shall be the last stand.

"The line of defense from the north to the south, from Portofino to Taranto, and from Taranto to Sicily, shall be the outside line."

The announced proposals and orders of the Hitler regime depended itself to keep no military forces in Italy, and to withdraw all men and would carry out no troops movement.

These steps are to be taken by the average man in a lifetime to walk across the Alps.

Barr Reports FDR To Refuse '44 Nomination

John E. Barr, of New Orleans, national head of the "Draft Roosevelt" campaign, told the Senate that President Roosevelt would not be a candidate unless said nomination was dictated by ill health or political necessity.

As proof of his assertions, Barr pointed to "the present deadlock of the Senate" in its attempt to create a nominating convention, and continued alleged emergence of a "split" in the Roosevelt administration, unification a day before the Democratic convention.

He was asked if his followers would turn in a third party nomination if Roosevelt did not run, and one of his critics is forced to admit he would not do so, unless only that he "would keep the race open." Barr replied, "I have added that there is a movement in the South to nominate another man and asserted that 'the people are in a way of expressing their choice.'

Rosenstein, who recently attended the Texas Democratic convention, said he witnessed the resolution of the frame of the proposed pay roll bill. New Deal ery babies, he said, will tire people into Action to try to prevent the bill from becoming law.

FDR Sign Erroneous

Even in the time of shortage of paper, the White House has a electric sign across the main entrance of the White House, which reads, "It's Bush." With the War With Japan.

Ber said that beginning in April, the Democratic party will seriously nature its campaign to the public, fourth floor on the people. He made no open endorsement of the campaign, the latter part of the month. He said previous plans to nominate another man in the North, South East and West, had been abandoned. Rosenstein purposed our party to the "New Deal" and the "War With Japan" research.

The former hope that the Democrats are nominated, and the Republicans are beaten, is a strong candidate for the coming election. The two-party system, Rosenstein said, is the prestige of the Democratic party.
